courses in music education in graduate and undergraduate programs, supervision of student teachers, supervision of undergraduate and graduate research, and other responsibilities as per the interests of the candidate and needs of the division. We seek candidates with a strong background in instrumental (band) music and pedagogy and who have experience with or interest in online education. Areas of research and practice may include instrumental music, social justice, intersections of world music and music education, creativity, alternative and progressive approaches to music making, or other subjects that would contribute to the broad research interests of our division and school. Additional duties may include committee service, recruitment activities, and participation in the ongoing work of the Music Education division, School of Music, and the College of the Arts.

MINIMUM QUALIFICATIONS: An earned doctorate or equivalent in music education is strongly preferred; ABD candidates will be considered. We seek candidates with significant K-12 teaching experience and prefer those with collegiate teaching experience. An emerging or established record of scholarship including publications, conference presentations, and other appropriate activities is required. Especially sought are candidates possessing versatility, energy, a commitment to work with diverse populations, a collegial disposition, and who are enthusiastic about participating in ongoing curricular transformation in order to address music education issues of the twenty-first century.

APPLICATION DEADLINE: Full consideration will be given to candidates that apply and supply all supporting application materials prior to February 16, 2018. To apply for this position and to see the full job description, please visit <https://jobs.kent.edu>. Please provide a letter of interest that describes your experiences and strengths in meeting the listed requirements, a current curriculum vitae, and complete contact information for 3-5 references. Additional materials may be requested at a later date. Questions may be directed to Dr. Jay Dorfman, jdorfma2@kent.edu, (330) 672-3871.

Kent State University is a comprehensive university with a “higher research” Carnegie designation. The Hugh A. Glauser School of Music offers undergraduate, masters, and doctoral programs in music performance, theory/composition, music education, conducting, and ethnomusicology. The Music Education division features teacher licensure programs, the largest online Master of Music in music education program, and a storied Doctor of Philosophy degree with alumni in prominent academic positions. Kent State University is located in northeast Ohio, close to the cultural amenities of both Cleveland and Akron.
