developing new areas of research and teaching within the discipline

- Continuing, full-time position; remuneration package: $125K - $149K p.a. which includes salary, leave loading and 17% superannuation

About the opportunity

We invite applications for a full-time, continuing position within the Film Studies program. While the area of specialisation is open, candidates whose work examines current trends in Global, Regional, and/or Transnational/transcultural film studies are strongly encouraged to apply. The department is particularly interested in candidates whose work engages with historical and theoretical approaches within the discipline and are able to create connections with other University strengths, including Art History, Media and Communications, and English Literature.

This academic position reports to the Chair of Department of Art History and requires an energetic and committed individual to take on academic teaching at undergraduate and postgraduate levels and research responsibilities.

In this exciting lectureship, you will:

- teach curriculum for undergraduate and postgraduate courses in Film Studies
- provide leadership in curriculum development, including online and blended coursework delivery
- contribute to the research strengths of the school, including publishing regularly in journals of high ranking and other quality outlets, and applying for research grants
- supervise Higher Degree Research students as well as Honours and Masters dissertation students
- develop effective interdisciplinary collaborations within the University, across the academic field, and with external stakeholders
- contribute to academic administration

About you

As the successful candidate you will have:

- a complete or near complete PhD in the area of Film Studies
- teaching experience at tertiary level in Film Studies
- a demonstrated research track record in Film Studies
- demonstrable knowledge and expertise in one or more of the following areas: World/global cinema studies, Regional cinema studies, Transnational/transcultural cinema studies
- evidence of capacity for efficiency and responsibility in general academic administrative tasks
