an undergraduate population of 52% ethnic minority students and 66% female students. The College of Visual and Performing Arts seeks to attract an equally diverse applicant pool for this position. UNC Greensboro is an inclusive learning community with a campus-wide culture that embodies access, equity, diversity, excellence, and collaboration. With an enrollment of more than 18,000 students, including 3,500 graduate students, and 2,800 faculty and staff, UNC Greensboro is one of the most diverse universities in the UNC system. UNC Greensboro is in a metropolitan area of more than 1.6 million in the Piedmont region of North Carolina, between the Atlantic Ocean and the Appalachian Mountains.

The School of Art's New Media and Design program encompasses a range of conceptual and technological approaches relevant to contemporary art and design practices. The successful candidate will contribute to undergraduate and graduate education, creative research in art and design, and will provide service to academic and professional institutions. All faculty participate in and contribute to curricular development, program evaluation, and recruitment. Ideal candidates will have strengths in areas such as interactive art, digital art, internet art, generative art, or interaction design. In the cover letter, candidates should describe how their experience with inequality has informed their discipline, typical practices in their field, and the broader university environment, as well as how this has or has not influenced their professional work.

Responsibilities:

- Teach three (3) courses per semester
- Develop curriculum in New Media and Design
- Pursue an active and rigorous program of creative research
- Engage in an ongoing dialogue about the program and art and design disciplines
- Continue developing diversity competencies, such as racial literacy and culturally responsive pedagogy, to create an inclusive and equitable learning environment
- Advise and mentor undergraduate and graduate students
- Supervise student research projects and theses
- Provide service to the School of Art, college, university and community

Minimum Qualifications

- MFA in Visual Art, or terminal degree in a related discipline
- strong record of creative activity
- fluent knowledge of contemporary art and design practices, broadly defined to include diverse perspectives and approaches
- ability to situate your field in a social (cultural, historical) context
