Job Description

The Department of Consumer and Design Sciences at Auburn University is seeking a dedicated and knowledgeable individual who has passion in instruction for a non-tenure track Lecturer position in Interior Design. The successful candidate will be responsible for teaching undergraduate studio and lecture courses, contributing to curriculum development, advising undergraduate students, engaging with the department and industry partners, and promoting the program excellence in and outside the university. This position offers an exciting opportunity to work in a nationally ranked, CIDA-accredited program with strong industry support and a commitment to excellence in education.

Interior Design Program: The nationally ranked, CIDA-accredited program has approximately 113 pre-majors at freshman level and 177 majors competitively selected for the sophomore to senior sequenced, studio-based program that includes a ten-week professional internship. Students pay an extra professional fee to support specialized program needs and updates, field trips, approved certifications, and others. An industry Advisory Board has provided strong support for 30 years.
